THE Translator has followed the plan of Dr. Pemberton, as being that generally approved by the Apothecaries.— He hopes the translation is faithful, though it is perhaps more literal than was always necessary. As to the Remarks, though they may be to some superfluous, he is afraid there are too many for whom they are neither too explicit nor too numerous. He has been persuaded to mention the doses of medicines; and has, in some measure, complied, though not perfectly with his own approbation; as the same medicines are given in various doses, not only in different diseases, but in different circumstances of the same disease.

generally approved by the Academies.— He hopes the translation is faithful, though it is perhaps more literal than was always may be to some superfluous, he is afraid there are too many for whom they are neither too explicit nor too numerous. He has been obliged to mention the doses of medicines, and has, in some instances, copied, though not exactly with his own approbation, as the same medicines are given in various doses, not only in different diseases, but in different circumstances of the same disease.
